in a dazed way and become unconscious.

When she awoke, she says, one of the men was standing over her. She screamed at the top of her voice. Hereman Spitz, the janitor, heard the young woman's yells and called Fatrolman Best and Detective Gallagan, who were passing. The men hurried to the room door, which is on the first floor, and pounded loudly.

"Who's out there. You can't come in," came from a voice on the inside.

Hearing the girl's voice subdued, the two officers put their shoulders to the door and broke it. They found the girl on the bed, hardly able to speak. The two men were in the room.

The girl was turned over to a matron, Miss Alice Smith, and Romer and Guadno were locked up. After hearing the story, the Magistrate turned to the defendants and said severely:

"Til hold you fellows in $3,000 bail, each, and hope that no one bails you out. This girl is in no condition to appear against you. She is weak and terrified, I'll call the case in two days."

Miss Michaels was returned to the custody of Miss Smith.
